Biography

Francisco Sabaté Llopart “el Quico” was born on March 30th 1915 in Hospitalet de Llobregat. He was the second child of Manuel Sabaté Escoda and Madrona Llopart Batlle. At the age of 16 he entered the CNT of Hospitalet de Llobregat. He was a very active anarchist militant throughout the II Republic. After the military coup, Quico Sabaté and his brother fought with the Aguiluchos column. After the war he was imprisoned in the concentration camp of Vernet d’Ariège (France). When World War II broke out his was sent to work as a fitter in the construction of a gunpowder factory in Angoulême. There is no information as to whether he collaborated with the French resistance.

Between 1945 and June 1949 Sabaté, following instructions from the CNT, crossed the border various times and went to Barcelona to perpetrate robberies and spread underground propaganda against the Franco dictatorship. In November 1948 he was condemned by a French court in Ceret for illegal possession of arms and he was arrested in June 1949. He was sent to prison in Lyon until 1952 and was forced to live in Dijon until 1955. After that he went against the CNT’s instructions and went back to the armed struggle. He entered the Grupos

Quico Sabaté’s tomb in Sant Celoni cemetery. The tomb has been refurbished to commemorate the 50th anniversary of his death.
Starting in 1951, CNT militants such as Josep Lluís Faceries, Francisco Sabaté Llopart “el Quico” (died in Sant Celoni on January 5th 1960) and Ramon Vila Capdevila led what was known as the “armed opposition to the Franco regime”. They operated in the cities (robberies, underground propaganda, sabotage, etc.) and sought support in rural areas before fleeing across the border to France.

The last journey
On December 31st 1959 Quico Sabaté crossed the border near the Hostal de la Muga with a group of libertarian resistance fighters: Antoni Miracle Guitart, Martín Ruiz Montoya, Rogelio Madrigal Torres and Francisco Cenesa Alcaraz. After a night of making the guerrillas were spotted by two Civil Guards on patrol at the Casat de Falgàs, in the Lladó municipality. After a shootout the group fled. The police force was quickly mobilised and a lot of outposts were put on alert. On day 3 the anarchists were located and surrounded by the Civil Guard at Mas Clara, in the municipality of Sarnia de Ter. Sabaté was the only one to escape the ambush of Civil Guards, the rest died during the early hours of January 4th. Sabaté walked all night; during the day of the 4th he must have stayed hidden and he then continued to advance after dark. On the morning of the 5th he arrived at Fornells de la Selva train station. The CNT militant’s corpse lay all morning covered with a sheet. The CNT’s delegate, Abel Rocha, arrived along with the other militia man on patrol, Josep Sibina “Pitu”, who emptied the cartridge of his gun into Sabaté’s head, disfiguring his face.

Civil Guard. Sabaté stopped the farmer Josep Vives (photo 2) and asked him where he could find a doctor. He replied that in Sant Celoni there was a doctor called Bari Nolasc on the other side of town. Sabaté got onto the farmer’s cart and he took him to Carrer Sant Roc. Walking along Carrer Sant Josep he asked a woman where the doctor’s surgery was. Very close to Carrer José Antonio (today the Carrer Major), they didn’t open the surgery door to him. Sabaté rang the door of a neighbour and asked her if she would let him in to shave. She answered that she couldn’t open because she was sick in bed. He then knocked on the door of another family (photo 3). The father didn’t let him in. Sabaté’s appearance, unshaven as he was with blood stains on his clothes, did not inspire trust. The two men got into a fight and pushed each other down to the street to Carrer Santa Tecla. Amidst all the shouting, the vice deputy of the armed citizen’s militia, Abel Rocha, arrived on the scene and shot at Sabaté. The bullet hit the neighbour in the back. He loosened his grip on “el Quico” who managed to pull himself away after biting the man’s hand. That’s when Abel Rocha fired his machine gun against Quico Sabaté. As he fell, Sabaté fired two shots at the armed militia man: one hit him in the knee and the other in the chest where he kept a hand grenade that saved his life. Soon after that the Civil Guard arrived along with the other militia man on patrol, Josep Sibina “Pitu”, who emptied the cartridge of his gun into Sabatés head, disfiguring his face.

The CNT militant’s corpse lay all morning covered with a sheet in Carrer Santa Tecla. The town photographer, Jaume March, (photo 4) was called upon by the Civil Guard to photograph the corpse. The negatives were confiscated as soon as they were developed.

The newspapers on January 6th gave full spread coverage to the death and life of Francisco Sabaté alias “el Quico”. Here are two of the front headlines; one is from issue 401 of the paper El caso by the journalist Enrique Rubio and the headline of La Vanguardia: “Yesterday, the forces of law and order shot the famous bandit Francisco Sabaté Lloparrt”.
